To restore competition, forget about breakups and require Microsoft to license its source code for a set fee. And with numerous companies selling compatible versions, we might finally see a leaner and more stable Windows.

Microsoft should be required to publish all the "hooks" into their OS at launch, patch, upgrade. There should be a penalty for each one discovered that have not been published. Setup a "bounty" system for people to find them. First one to find and post to a web site received a percentage of the fine for that specific hook.
